Fostering Inclusivity : Empowering Differently Abled

A disability is characterized by a malfunctioning, disturbance, or loss in the normal functioning of physical, mental, or psychological processes. Article 1 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disability envisages that differently abled persons include those who have long-term physical, mental, intellectual or sensory impairments which in interaction with various barriers may hinder their full and effective participation in society on an equal basis with others. An estimated 1.3 billion people – or 16% of the global population experience a significant disability today.

Differently-abled persons are incredibly diverse in their identities, and those who experience other and intersecting forms of discrimination are at further risk of being excluded from society. Inequities arise from unfair conditions faced by persons with disabilities, including stigma, discrimination, poverty, exclusion from education and employment, and barriers faced in the health system itself.

Factors like limited accessibility, inadequate educational structures, poverty, higher rates of unemployment and economic inactivity often lead to undesirable consequences for differently-abled persons such as social exclusion, negative stereotypes and perceptions, financial hardship, and challenges in the areas of both physical and mental health. Differently-abled persons encounter barriers due to a lack of access to justice; minimal participation in political and public life; discriminatory attitudes toward sexual health, reproductive rights and the right to family life, lack of birth registration; and lack of access to an inclusive and quality education in their own language, and encounter the effects of increasing risks and vulnerability that climate change is creating. Consequently, a system-wide reform is required to strengthen national and International policies and legal systems to ensure that all differently-abled persons can access justice through quality education, employment, and disaster risk reduction programs.
